

HIGH SCHOOL HACKS

WONDER

Every ministry is different. Whether you're teaching middle schoolers, high schoolers, teenagers with disabilities, or all three, here's how to hack this series to fit your unique and diverse audience.

REMEMBER

High schoolers are grappling with deeper questions of faith and authenticity—don't shy away from tough discussions. Give them space to wrestle with doubt, and frame worship as something real and raw, not just a routine. Mirror this by creating spaces where worship feels timely and relatable. Remind teenagers to connect worship to everyday moments—like listening to music, having deep conversations, or practicing gratitude. Throughout Wonder, help teenagers worship as a response to God's love and goodness rather than as a performance or obligation.

REVISE

To make this series more accessible for high schoolers, here's what to adjust...

- In Week 1, challenge high schoolers to define holiness in their own words and apply it to real-life choices, since high schoolers are at a stage where they can critically navigate complex spiritual concepts and articulate their beliefs.
- In Week 2's "Canyon Camp Chaos" activity, rather than doing a scavenger hunt, give students real-life survival scenarios and have them use the objects to solve a problem. Then have them discuss how God provides guidance and resources in tough times.
- For the "I Am Healing" Response in Week 4, allow students to write anonymous notes about a time they experienced healing (or still need it). Afterward, they can mix the notes up and let peers pray over them.
- Each week, invite a different high schooler to read the week's psalm aloud. This also helps re-engage attention by incorporating student voices. Be sure to invite readers in advance so they can practice and feel more confident when reading aloud.

REPLACE

And here are the Building Blocks you may want to swap for something else...

- Every week, replace one of the games to create more time for discussion. If you know you want more time for your students to talk about what it looks like or an extended time to worship God, shorten or eliminate the opening activities.
- For the "Write to Remember" activity in Week 2, instead of writing on rocks, have students write letters to their future selves. This encourages high schoolers to think more deeply about God's provision and faithfulness than limiting it to the amount of text they can fit on a rock. Consider sealing them to be read later in the year.
